

Remote Viewing Diary of Billie Berri, Page 1:
SPRING 1980: FALL 1980:
 Copyright 1998 by Jon Dieges

THE FIRST SPRING--1980

[Oriole Arrivals Prior to Spring
1980 in relation to Full Moons](#)

Thursday, March 6, 1980

Friday, March 7, 1980

Saturday, March 8, 1980, page 1 of 2

Saturday, March 8, 1980, page 2 of 2

Sunday, March 9, 1980, page 1 of 2

Sunday, March 9, 1980, page 2 of 2

Monday, March 10, 1980, page 1 of 2

Monday, March 10, 1980, page 2 of 2

THE FIRST FALL--1980

Tuesday, August 26, 1980

Monday, September 8, 1980

Tuesday, September 9, 1980

Tuesday, September 9, 1980, Part 2

Wednesday, September 10, 1980

Thursday, September 11, 1980

1980, no day recorded

Note: the page numbers noted refer to the page in the Thomas Guide for that county in California. They were invaluable in searching for what sometimes seemed "a needle in a haystack."

Website for Thomas Guides

Sunday, September 21, 1980

Sunday, September 21, 1980, page 2

Monday, September 22, 1980, page 1

Monday, September 22, 1980, page 2

Tuesday, September 23, 1980

When the telepathic impressions first started for Billie, they seemed to come out of nowhere. They came so fast she jotted them down on the only paper handy such as a paper towel, making them nearly illegible.

This situation was corrected as soon as possible. Very soon she became a very good reporter, answering Who? What? When? Where? and What was the weather like there?

Soon, she told me one of the strangest things ever shortly after this remote viewing phenomenon began. What she said could be partly explained by the fact that nearly 3/4 of the 1000-mile migration is in Western Mexico and Baja California. Someone spoke to her in her mind in Spanish, which she knew a little of from spending time in San Miguel Allende in the 1940's. When she told me about it she said she didn't know how to translate "recibirse" into English.

Subsequently I found out "recibirse" mostly applies to receiving a degree from a university. So, putting that fact together with what she was able to translate, the voice said to her:

"I remember you. To receive a degree in bird migration, listen to me and I will show you the way."

En español, "Yo te recuerdo. Recibirse en la migracion de los pajaros, escuchame y te indicare la ruta."

"Way" could have a double meaning here of "method" as well as "route," but in Spanish "ruta" does not have the double meaning; nevertheless, "the voice," knowing the recipient of this "mensaje" spoke English, could have known that, once translated, the double meaning would be obvious.

A triple meaning could also have been intended since "the way" could also have referred to a spiritual path or journey, which it certainly became.

Saturday, March 8, 1980, page 2

1980, no day recorded

